Over five days of the Virtual
General Conference, we:

Kept spirits up

What a beautiful experience! This event had a healing effect on the political science community in the post-COVID-19.

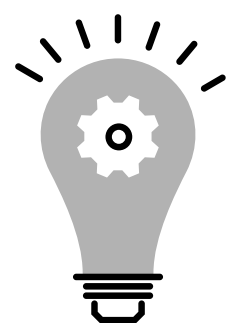

After months of isolation due to COVID-19, the conference was a ray of light – exciting new research, seeing and interacting with colleagues is a reminder, we are not alone in this fractured world.

The ECPR Virtual General Conference was a delight to attend.

The best 'new normal' experience so far!

Sparked conversations

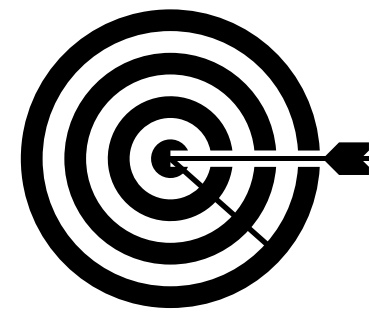

Well done! A very good job at creating a dynamic conference spirit' in spite of the physical distance.

In these difficult times, the conference succeeded in supporting research exchange and discussion. This is already a remarkable achievement. The lower fees also opened the door for scholars who might not have been able to attend otherwise.

Exciting, engaging, and welcoming. We had terrific discussions in the various panels. I'll definitely be back next year, whether virtually or physically

Exceeded expectations

The abundance of panels and topics and the ability to attend them with such ease left me overwhelmed – in a positive way!

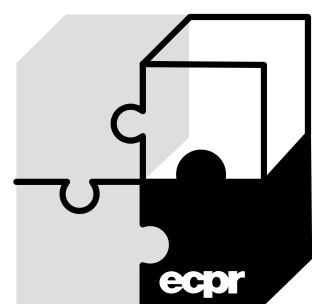

Admittedly, I was curious to see how a huge conference could be done virtually, but I am blown away by a rich and insightful week.

The ECPR Conference set the bar very high. Very smooth organisation, well done!

Big thanks for our inspiring week!

Embraced the new reality

A really fruitful and very well organised event, which could be a role model for future online conferences!

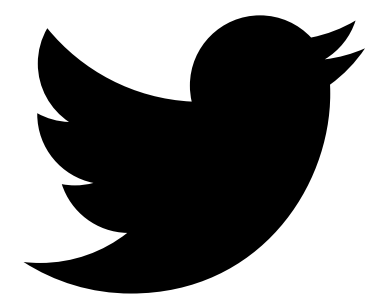

Great organisation, great website, super helpful IT support. Big thank you!

I didn't realise just how much I missed the intellectual stimulation of conference attendance and academic endeavour, after these long months of online teaching and admin, until the conference. I am very grateful to the organisers and all the team that made it go so well. Thank you.
